Theodor Fontane Introduction Novels Novellen

fontane: nature in the novels of fontane - the function of nature within the novels of theodor fontane. nature is examined in its bearing on the form and content of individual novels, attention being given to the chronological development of fontane's work. an attempt is made to assess the significance of nature in the writer's art as a whole. ii landscape and change in three novels by theodor fontane - have concluded that fontane did not have a well-articulated theoretical stance. i have therefore drawn my conclusions from fontane's novels as opposed to his commentary. the first sixteen chapters of theodor fontane's cecile (1887) take place en route to, or in and around, thale in the harz mountains. the stechlin. by theodor fontane ... - describing his novel the stechlin, theodor fontane claimed: 'at the end an old man dies and two young people marry; that is pretty much everything that takes place in the course of five hundred pages.' fontane was the first german novelist of social realism on a european scale, and this, his last novel, is a massive chronicle of the manners and ... 'evil tongues': the rhetoric of discreet indiscretion in ... - would like to consider fontane's gossip here again from linguistic, literary and social perspectives in terms of its function in fontane's so-called society novels. on this occasion, i will concentrate mainly on the first of these novels set in berlin, l'adultera, where this type of dialogue began to develop as an important daniel mendelsohn: bibliography articles, reviews (general ... - 192. heroine addict.
